Please note, that while the likelihood of Aboriginal heritage occurring within the lower lying swampy areas is reduced, the potential for unanticipated discoveries cannot be entirely ruled out. Swamps and wetlands were known to have been targeted by Aboriginal people for various resources including bird eggs. Aboriginal heritage is more likely to occur on surrounding elevated landforms with well drained soils, however, there remains potential for finds (such as isolated artefacts) to occur in the lower lying areas.

To assist you and your works personnel, the online module linked below provides a general overview of Aboriginal heritage in Tasmania, it assists in understanding and recognising Aboriginal Heritage and in understanding obligations under the Act.
